

Love. Protect. Immunize.

National Infant Immunization Week

Vaccines are one of history's most successful tools for preventing serious disease and death.

Diseases that were once common place, such as polio, measles, mumps, whooping cough, diphtheria, and rubella, are now only distant memories for most Americans. Today, vaccines can prevent more diseases than ever before, yet despite recent gains in childhood immunization coverage, over 1 million of our nation's two-year-olds are still missing one or more of the recommended immunizations. Make sure all children are vaccinated on time, every time.
